Key Takeaways

$1 \begin{aligned} & \text { Americans of all ages and political persuasions love ice cream. Vanilla reigns supreme as the } \\ & \text { public's favorite flavor, with chocolate and strawberry rounding out the top 3. Mint chocolate chip, }\end{aligned}$ public's favorite flavor, with chocolate and strawberry rounding out the top 3 . Mint chocolate chip, butter pecan, and cookies \& cream each have strong contingents who prefer them over all other options. Flavor is consumers' top consideration when choosing between ice creams, with price and quantity also factoring in heavily.
2 The public has clear preferences when it comes to how they consume their ice cream. Hot fudge, whipped cream, and caramel sauce stand out as the most popular toppings, while the top fruit and nut mix-ins are strawberries and pecans/peanuts, respectively. Most adults lick the ice cream first when eating an ice cream cone, though are more likely than others to bite it instead.

3 When asked to compare the United States Congress to a flavor of ice cream, a plurality of Americans say: Rocky Road - anything but smooth. A sizable share say instead that Congress is best represented by a banana split - split down the middle. And in third place: butter pecan - rich and nutty.
